In 2010, EIT Climate-KIC, a major EU climate initiative, was created as one of the first Knowledge and Innovation Communities (KICs) by the European Institute of Innovation and Technology (EIT), tasked with fostering sustainable European growth in the face of global challenges.

ClimateLaunchpad is our program for addressing climate change with scalable solutions, following three steps:

1. Invite green business ideas from diverse backgrounds.
2. Train participants to develop these ideas into successful companies.
3. Connect them with customers, the business community, and funding to build an ecosystem for scalable climate solutions.

Lab of Tomorrow'18

In Egypt, the packaging industry relies mostly on plastic due to cost constraints. Compliance with EU sustainability regulations is a challenge, as there's limited awareness of sustainability among consumers. Egypt aims to reduce single-use plastics and become greener by 2030, creating opportunities for sustainable products.

The "Lab of Tomorrow 18" brings together EU and Egyptian companies to focus on three business opportunities:

1. Boosting exports with affordable sustainable packaging.
2. Developing sustainable packaging for food and hospitality.
3. Enhancing resource efficiency in sustainable packaging.

Teams will address these opportunities during a five-day sprint week, followed by incubation.
